Descripción

Según la tradición, fue escrito alrededor del siglo VI a. de C. por el sabio Laozi, un archivista de la corte de la dinastía Zhou, por cuyo nombre se conoce el texto en China. La verdadera autoría y fecha de composición o de compilación del libro es aún objeto de debate. Este texto es uno de los fundamentos del taoísmo filosófico y tuvo una fuerte influencia sobre otras escuelas, como el legalismo y el neoconfucianismo. Tiene un papel importante en la religión china, relacionado no sólo con el taoísmo religioso, sino también con el budismo, que cuando se introdujo por primera vez en China fue interpretado usando en gran medida palabras y conceptos taoístas. En China la filosofía de la naturaleza y la visión del mundo están impregnadas del pensamiento taoísta y así muchos artistas, pintores, calígrafos y hasta jardineros han usado este libro como fuente de inspiración. Su influencia se ha esparcido también más allá del Lejano Oriente, ayudada por las muchas traducciones diferentes del texto a lenguas occidentales.
